1 Feasibility Study

Before launching a procurement procedure, the contracting authority / the promoter should clarify and examine the various parameters for the possible realisation of the intended project. In a preliminary phase it is important to clarify the needs, define the program and necessary space as well as evaluating a realistic financial framework. For this purpose the contracting authority should appoint independent professionals to establish the feasibility of the intended project. The feasibility study can include

- Evaluation of different sites
- Adequacy of the site for the intended project
- Specification of functions
- Clarification of programmatic needs and the definition of the spaces needed
- Definition of quality requirements, building standard and equipment
- Clarification of existing infrastructure
- Traffic solutions, connections, public transport, parking etc.
- Evaluation of legal parameters and construction law
- Evaluation of the ecological impact of the project
- Evaluation of particular aspects of the site and/or the project (such as historic heritage protection, specific security requirements or health parameters to be respected) -
- Definition of the necessary financial framework
- Time schedule for the procedure, planning and realisation
- Definition of energy standards
- Definition of standards concerning building material (grey energy)
- Sustainability aspects
- public consultations

The feasibility study as a clarification of fundamental aspects helps the promoter in taking basic decisions. It is not an obligation, but a highly recommended step for the organiser of a competition and a proof of responsible handling.

2 Financial check

Statement of the financial situation of the project.

3 The brief

The contracting authority as promoter is responsible for the competition brief. For this task the contracting authority should ask a competent professional to coordinate and complete the brief. The better the preparation of the procedure and the brief the better the result. The more precisely the question is formulated the sharper the answers will be.

The setting of tasks, the evaluation criteria, the required documents from the participants and the composition of the jury must be addressed in the brief.

With the help of the feasibility study the brief sets up realistic parameters and defines the detailed program. The conclusions of the feasibility study should be reflected in the competition brief.

The feasibility study shall be made available to the participants.

The work required from the participants must be adequate to the task and provide sufficient information for the understanding of the entry.

Only such documents shall be requested from the participants for which a professionally competent evaluation is guaranteed.

The competition brief has to grant the largest spectrum of possibilities to solve the task.

The jury has to be announced in the brief.

The jury has to approve the brief.

In particular, the competition brief contains the following:

Procedural Regulations

- a) designation of the contracting authority
- b) indication of competition type and procedure
- c) declaration of liability concerning the regulations
- d) reference to governing regulations pertaining to public procurement law
- e) conditions for participation and indication of deadline for fulfilling the conditions as well as those conditions concerning the contracting authorities, say, in case of extension of the participating group
- f) total prize-money sum for awards (prizes as well as maximum sum and conditions for eventual honourable mentions); information concerning how the prize-money sum was calculated and the approximate number of prizes to be awarded
<http://www.arching.at/preisgeldrechner/>
- g) contracting authority's intention concerning how the work will proceed further as well as the type and scope of the specified contract
- h) regulations concerning the procedure in the case of a disagreement, remedies
- i) names of the jury members, alternate jury members, and appointed experts
- j) names of the selected and/or invited participants
- k) schedule for the completion of the competition (registration date, deadline for questions and answers, time and place to deliver competition entries)
- l) index of the documents delivered to participants
- m) index of work required from participants and specifications concerning the representation of the project
- n) type of identification code for all competition entry documents and obligation to declare the name of the author(s) and their collaborators in a sealed envelope to preserve anonymity

Regulations for formulating Tasks

- a) the brief contains a summary of the task of the competition and indication of the involved fields of expertise
- b) binding specifications shall only be stated concerning very clear issues, where any other solution is absolutely excluded.
- c) Variants (deviations from the specifications<sup>1</sup>) should be allowed as often as possible. Attention must be drawn to the need to define the minimum requirements to be met by variants before indicating that variants may be submitted (Article 45 of Directive 2014/24/EU).

- d) The ACE recommends that professional organisations at national or regional level offer consultation as well as an assessment of whether the competition brief is in agreement with this recommendations or not. Such an assessment must be noted in the competition brief.
- e) Site visit - colloquium
There shall be the option to visit the site. Questions can be raised and discussions held. The minutes of this meeting have to be submitted to all participants.
- f) Questions and Answers
Up to a specified date, the participants can ask questions concerning the competition brief. The jury responds in writing on behalf of the contracting authority, compiles all questions and answers within the indicated time frame in a document available to all (forwarded to all) participants. After circulation of questions and answers reasonable time should be allowed for submission of entries.

4 The design brief has to be approved by all jury members in its meeting before launching the competition.

Master document for an architectural design competition by the Architects Council of Europe

Note: this document can be used to prepare an architectural design competition according to the European legal framework (Public Procurement Directive)<sup>2</sup> and the relevant recommendations by the ACE concerning architectural design competitions (9 rules). This document provides a template based on best practise experience and recommendations. A competition which uses this template provides the client with the best projects and safeguards the interests of both the client and the architects.

The document can be used by public as well as by private clients.
